The company behind Kyrano jeans has over 50 years' experience producing denim pants. They first produced Hood jeans back in the late 1990s, which at the time was one of only a hand full of companies making jeans for the biker.

Now Kyrano has gone into partnership with experts who have developed K-tech soft knitted Para-aramid fabrics. Aramid fibres are what are used to make Kevlar, so the Para-aramid K-tech fabrics and threads used by Kyrano is the company's own brand of Kevlar. When added to the denim and then tested, the resulting pants withstood such incredible force, it's been suggested they are the strongest motorcycle jeans in the world today. Quite a boast!

The regular fit of these jeans is very stylish and shows no outward signs of their intended use. The waist and seat are a comfortable fit with enough room around the backside so as not to dig in. On the bike, they're just as comfy; the hip and knee armour is in the right place and it stays there. I would say that even with the armour left in, not many people would guess that these are biker jeans.

The Kyrano G8s are fully lined from waist to hem with the K-tech Para-aramid fibre, that's both front and back! So in effect, they're double skinned. This will make them warmer than most on a hot day, but the fabric is flexible and breathable so cooler air will circulate through.

They come with CE-approved D3o impact protectors in both the hips and knees. This armour is lightweight, pliable, and discreet when in place. It would benefit, however, from being a little bigger around the knee area and extending down the shin.

These jeans have quality all the way through them; the design and technology used by Kyrano have produced the best motorcycle jeans I have seen. A lot of money, but I reckon they're worth it. ■

In a Line:

A perfect 10; they're not cheap, but they're simply the best biker jeans
